Digital National Security Archive (DNSA)

Digital National Security Archive

The Digital National Security Archive (DNSA) offers access to primary documents from the National Security Archive. DNSA is the most comprehensive collection available of significant primary documents central to US foreign and military policy since 1945. Over 80,000 of the most important, declassified documents - totaling more than 500,000 pages - are included in the database. Many are published now for the first time.

The National Security Archive is an independent non-governmental research institute and library located at The George Washington University in Washington, D.C. The Archive collects and publishes declassified documents acquired through the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The Archive is a tax-exempt, public organization which receives no U.S. government funding; its budget is supported by publication royalties and donations from foundations and individuals. On March 17, 2000, Long Island University named the National Security Archive as winner of a Special George Polk Award for 1999 for "piercing self-serving veils of government secrecy" and "serving as an essential journalistic resource."

DNSA is currently comprised of 31 collections, each focused on a single topic and containing a diverse range of policy documents including presidential directives, memos, diplomatic dispatches, meeting notes, independent reports, briefing papers, White House communications, email, confidential letters and other secret material. Additionally, contextual and reference supplements are provided for each collection, including general introductory material, a chronology, glossary and bibliography.

In its totality, DNSA offers the most powerful research and teaching tool available in the area of U.S. foreign policy, intelligence and security issues during this pivotal period of twentieth-century history.
